Educational Visit to the National Museum and Space Museum

On 5 September 2026, students from Global Pathways International School (GPIS) participated in an educational visit to the National Museum and Space Museum, extending their learning beyond the classroom.

At the National Museum, students explored Myanmar's rich history, cultural heritage, traditional arts, and historical treasures. At the Space Museum, they discovered the fascinating world of space science, astronomy, and technological innovation.

The visit provided students with valuable real-world learning experiences, helping them broaden their knowledge, spark curiosity, and develop a deeper appreciation for history, culture, science, and technology. It was an inspiring and memorable learning journey for the GPIS students.

Pearson Edexcel A-Level Programme at GPIS

Hus Luck Lwin
50% Scholarship

Global Pathways International School (GPIS) is currently offering Pearson Edexcel A-Level Programme, providing students with a strong academic pathway to prepare for further study at universities abroad.

To recognize outstanding academic achievement, GPIS also offers scholarship discount opportunities. We are proud to highlight Mg Saw Khant Myae Thar, who achieved 1A* and 6A and received 100% Scholarship and Ma Hsu Luck Lwin, who achieved 6A* in her IGCSE O Level examinations and was awarded 50% Scholarship to continue their studies in the Pearson Edexcel A-Level Programme at GPIS.

Upon completing A-Level Programme, students who wish to pursue higher education overseas can also receive university application and progression support through A Link Education Consultancy, helping them explore suitable study destinations and take the next step toward international higher education.

The next intake of Pearson Edexcel A-Level Programme will open in January 2027, giving more students the opportunity to join the programme, benefit from available scholarship support, and prepare for their future university journey abroad.

Language is the Key to success

IGCSE Batch – 12

More than a mere tool for communication, language is the core foundation of human identity and progress. It is the connective tissue that allows us to share complex thoughts, articulate emotions, and build societies. This unique capacity elevates us beyond basic existence, enabling collaboration, innovation, and the pursuit of shared dreams. Ultimately, language is not just a means of expression but a key, one that unlocks potential, opens doors to opportunity, and guides individuals toward their personal and professional aspirations.

Benefits & Mental Flexibility

One important benefit of language is that it promotes mental flexibility. Through language, we learn to think clearly, understand new ideas, and solve problems effectively. Learning new words and expressions trains our brain to adapt and process information in different ways. This mental flexibility helps individuals respond calmly and intelligently to new situations. It also improves decision-making and critical thinking, which are important skills for success in life. By strengthening the mind, language prepares us for the complex professional and social opportunities of the future.

Bridge of Opportunities

Learning a new language is similar to opening the door to a new world. Language is not just the set of words; it is the map to new opportunities. Nowadays, 50% of the online content we search is in English, which is a valuable tool for our self-study. To get more scholarship opportunities, to get into multinational companies, and to get freelance opportunities, we need a language not just as a key to communication but also academically. Someone who can use language well can also do better in listening and solving problems. Talking to local people in their language can make them think you respect their culture and language, which can help you make strong and respected connections. Like Nelson Mandela said, "If you talk to a man in language he understands, that goes to his head. If you talk to him in his language, that goes in his heart."

Leadership & Influence

A leader can use words to inspire and motivate. They have the power to build trust and gain alignment with their vision. However, leadership isn't just about talking; it is also about listening. You can only influence others when you truly hear the needs and want of your subordinates or colleagues. To listen effectively, you must understand the language they speak. When a team faces disagreement or an argument, a leader's role is to restore calm and find a solution. In tough times, a leader's influence leads to a clear decision that everyone can accept. But to speak effectively. A leader must listen first, and to listen, they must understand the language their team speaks. Effective communication is a back-and-forth flow between speaking and listening. Most leaders can talk, but the best ones understand the nuances of language.

They use this skill to resolve arguments, unite their coworkers, and make the firm decisions necessary to lead the way.

Self-expression & Identity

Language is much more than just a way to trade information; it is how we show the world who we really are. When we have the right words, we can share our feelings, our dreams, and our unique personalities. The way a person speaks, the words they choose, and even their accent can reflect their background, culture, and personality. Language also helps people connect with others who share similar experiences and traditions. This is a huge part of success because if you cannot express yourself, you often feel invisible or misunderstood. By mastering language, we gain the "key" to unlock our thoughts and build a clear identity. This strengthens our self-confidence and helps us develop a strong sense of identity. Whether it is speaking our native language or learning a new one, the words we choose help us stand out and connect with others. In this way, language plays a key role in shaping who we are.

Cultural Intelligence

Language is not just a tool for self-expression; it is also the key to understanding the culture we come from. Every culture is truly mesmerizing, with each having its own language that brings people together through words that carry history and meaning. Such as specific words in Japanese reflect nature in a way English cannot. To outsiders, a local language may seem like just a tool for communication. But in reality, it is the foundation upon which tradition and culture are built. It is the mother tongue. Traditions exist everywhere, and by valuing and cherishing them, we invite more to emerge, lighting our world with passion and unity. Linguistic traditions aren't just traditions. They are the reason we are all connected and bonded together, to enlighten peace with all of our souls. Language turns simple moments into meaningful connections. Every time you enter a restaurant, it helps ease the conversation. But more than that, it builds relationships with our locals, our neighbors, the people we share daily life with. Language isn't just about talking; it shapes our reputation. The way we speak, whether politely or with slang, is formed entirely by culture. Having a language isn't permission to say anything carelessly. True mastery means being reasonable, speaking not just from memory, but from understanding that shows in our actions. Language and culture cannot be separated; they exist in perfect balance. Language allows locals to express themselves, while culture molds it, much like a parent shapes a child.

Language transcends vocabulary and grammar; it is the heartbeat of human nature itself. It shapes our identity, our thoughts, our ambitions, our hopes, and the way we express all of this to the world. It unlocks doors to education, life-changing careers, rich cultural experiences, and lasting relationships. It gives leaders the power to listen with patience, understand with empathy, and guide others with wisdom, all while walking the path of justice. It allows us to step inside another culture, not to provoke, but to see the world through different eyes and find common ground with people from all walks of life. Language is the bridge that makes this possible. Each word carries its own meaning and unique perspective, and together they live within us, waiting to be shared. Language is not an obstacle to overcome, it is something we build over time through connections, relationships, and meaningful memories. We should cherish it, for it is the key to success, opening doors to peace, careers, social status, and philosophy.
